Frequently Asked Questions    The Deal

I.*      Rationale

a. Does the rationale for this deal have anything to do with the current economic conditions?

This choice was made with our long-term interests in mind. We did not decide to pursue this combination because of short-term economic pressures or motivations, but rather because we believe it will create an organization that is among the world's leading professional services firms with a compelling long-term value proposition. We believe that Towers Watson will be stronger than the sum of its parts, positioned for industry leadership long into the future.

2. The Deal

a. What do we expect will be the ratio of conversion of WW stock to TP shares?

Immediately following the close of the transaction, the Towers Perrin shareholders and Towers Perrin employees who receive restricted stock units, on the one hand, and the Watson Wyatt shareholders, on the other hand, will each be entitled to receive 50% of Towers Watson's voting common stock outstanding on a fully diluted basis. Watson Wyatt stockholders will receive one share of Towers Watson common stock for each share of Watson Wyatt common stock they own, while the number of shares to be received by the Towers Perrin shareholders will be based upon a fixed exchange ratio to be determined at the combination's closing.

This exchange ratio will be fixed to ensure that Towers Perrin shareholders and employees who receive restricted stock units and Watson Wyatt shareholders receive equal ownership of Towers Watson upon the combination's closing. As a result, there is no provision in the merger agreement to adjust this fixed exchange ratio.

b. Is there a risk that this deal will be perceived as anti-competitive?

We do not believe that this combination is anti-competitive. We believe that this combination will lead to significant benefits for our stakeholders, including our clients, our people, and our shareholders, as well as the communities in and for which we do business.

As previously disclosed, the transaction is subject to the satisfaction of customary closing conditions, including competition reviews in the U.S. and other countries.

c. Are there any external risks to completing the transaction?

The transaction is subject to approval by Watson Wyatt's stockholders and Towers Perrin's shareholders, as well as the satisfaction of customary closing conditions and regulatory review and approvals, including competition reviews in the U.S. and other countries and review by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. Beyond this, we have not identified any substantial elements that may affect the closing of the combination. We will be working with all of our internal and external stakeholders throughout the planning process to identify and address key issues on an ongoing basis.

d. How do our leaders perceive the initial press / analyst reaction to the announcement of the combination?

We have been gratified and excited to see the enthusiasm of others match our own since the announcement. In general, reactions have been extremely positive, as analysts and commentators have recognized the strategic and financial benefits that this combination will bring. There have, of course, been questions, and we look forward to sharing more information to address these questions as details become available, subject to legal limitations.

There was some movement in Watson Wyatt's stock price on the day after the announcement, but this was relatively minor and not surprising to us. It is common for the stock price of a firm to dip with the news of an announcement such as this, and the markets reacted predictably to this unexpected news.

3. Organizational Structure

a. How were the three business segments and four geographies for Towers Watson chosen?

The organizational structure for Towers Watson, including the business segments and geographies, was designed by John Haley and Mark Mactas. They wanted to structure the business in a way that would resonate well with both our external and internal constituencies. They aimed to create a streamlined, straightforward and efficient leadership structure that would be easy to communicate, reflect how Towers Watson will be run, facilitate understanding of our various businesses and create business units of meaningful size.

While we have three overall business segments, there is no intention to lose the practice identities or to cause a loss of synergy across or within segments.

b. What are the contracted tenures for Towers Watson's CEO and President?

As Towers Watson will be a public company, there typically will not be appointed terms for senior leadership. Towers Watson's Board of Directors will consider leadership appointments in due course, as it is appropriate.

a. When will more details on the complementary strengths of both firms be provided? Is it permissible for staff to opine on these complementary strengths in communicating with clients and colleagues?

The combination of Towers Perrin and Watson Wyatt does not merely create a larger company. The two firms have complementary geographic strengths so that Towers Watson's overall geographic position is improved more than if we were each strong in the exact same geographies.

Similarly, we also complement one another in specific practice areas. Towers Perrin, for example, has a larger Health Care practice, while Watson Wyatt has a larger Investment practice. Towers Perrin has a Reinsurance practice which Watson Wyatt does not have while Watson Wyatt has a Technology Administration Solutions practice which Towers Perrin does not currently have. In some areas, each organization supplements the needs of the other.

Beyond recognizing these strengths, you should not opine to clients about the approach that Towers Watson will take once the transaction has closed, and more importantly, you are prohibited from taking any actions based on such unfounded speculation. Remember, until the combination has closed, we must act as independent and separate companies and continue to compete where we compete today.

6. Implications

a. Do we expect there to be significant numbers of redundancies? When will these choices be made?

We haven't made any decisions with respect to redundancies at this point, and are prohibited from making any such decisions until the transaction closes. As part of the integration planning program, there will be merger teams created for the enterprise, as well as for each of Towers Watson's new business segments, geographies and corporate functions. These teams will be developing organizational structures and, post-close, strategies for each of Towers Watson's units.

In collaboration with the People Team, which is responsible for working with Towers Watson's executives to plan Towers Watson's people strategy and its supporting elements, these merger teams will make choices on resource requirements for their respective units. As we proceed through this planning process, we will look for ways to combine the unique strengths of both organizations and draw upon our shared values excellence, innovation, integrity, professionalism, collaboration and respect to guide our actions and choices. We intend to make decisions with a focus on our future and a respect for our history, and aim in all cases to bring together the best practices, capabilities and assets from the current organizations. We expect the majority of these decisions to be made and implemented within 12-24 months after the transaction has closed, though some decisions could be made sooner following the transaction's closing. However, until the transaction closes and we can meet with our counterparts to discuss these matters, we do not know what our needs will be.

As always, please remember that until the combination closes, both companies must act as independent and separate companies.

7. *Timing and Process

a. What third parties are supporting the integration effort?

Goldman Sachs is acting as financial advisor and Milbank, Tweed, Hadley & McCloy LLP is acting as legal advisor to Towers Perrin. Banc of America Merrill Lynch Securities is acting as financial advisor and Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP is acting as legal advisor to Watson Wyatt.

Additionally, we have retained consultants from the Monitor Group, a strategy consulting firm, to assist with developing and executing the integration planning program. The consultants from Monitor will be working with both Towers Perrin and Watson Wyatt to ensure a smooth rollout of the integration planning program.
